

Carl Maugeri

Carl Maugeri teaches Management Communication in the MBA program at the Wharton School, University of Pennsylvania. He is an Associate Director of the Wharton Communication Program and manages the communication component for the Wharton MBA for Executives in San Francisco.

Last spring he served as a China Program Director for Wharton's Global Immersion Program. Building on his background in public affairs communication, Maugeri developed and taught the media relations segment of the Management Communication course, and co-developed and taught the first-ever for-credit communication elective at Wharton, Advanced Persuasion/Media Relations.

Prior to joining Wharton, Maugeri served as Associate Director of Federal Relations in the Office of Government, Community and Public Affairs at Penn where he worked in advocacy for science research funding and higher education policy. He also has worked as a science and business journalist, contributing news and feature articles to the Philadelphia Inquirer, Philadelphia Daily News, and Courier-Post newspapers, as well as to industry research and development magazines including GlaxoSmithKline's R&D News. He holds a Masters Degree in Government Administration from the Fels Center of Government at Penn and a BA in English from St. Joseph's University in Philadelphia.
